SUMMARY: Major Figures in American Music is the core unit of Oral History of American Music. It consists of over 1,7000 interviews with composers, performers, and other significant musicians. The first subjects were those most fragile in terms of age and health, such as Eubie Blake, Nadia Boulanger, Aaron Copland, Harry Partch, Charles Seeger, Claire Reis, and Virgil Thomson. Among other senior composers interviewed during the OHAM's first decade were John Cage, Lou Harrison, Ernst Krenek, Leo Ornstein, and William Schuman. As OHAM proceeded, composers actively involved in their careers were included and have been updated periodically. To name a few: John Adams, Anthony Braxton, David Del Tredici, Lukas Foss, David Lang, Steve Reich, and Julia Wolfe. OHAM's program also includes oral histories with emerging young talents, with the plan to track their careers as they unfold in the future. In addition to interviews with primary subjects, the core unit includes testimonies from secondary sources about George Gershwin, Henry Cowell, Harry Lawrence Freeman, Percy Grainger, and Arnold Schoenberg.

From material for film "I Have Nothing To Say and I Am Saying It." Beta tape is also labeled #26? Music Project for Television? This video contains mostly clips from older movies or TV interviews. Brief shot of Cage and video editor sitting at machine--Excerpts from "Dreams That Money Can Buy" (1947): a surreal film accompanied by prepared piano music. The film involves spinning circular patterns and a shot of a woman in a costume descending a staircase. The film ends with a close-up shot of a man opening his eyes and a narrator saying something like "imagine a man having a dream like that. If he weren't such an extrovert, he could have been a poet!" Black and white clip of an interview with a brother of an artist (one of the Duchamp brothers?) discussing the artists' work and the concept of taste. Excerpt from film "The Collaborators" (Cage, Cunningham and Rauschenberg with David Vaughan (1987). An Interviewer with John Cage, Merce Cunningham, and a sculptor/designer who collaborated with Cage and Cunningham on Minutae and Antic Meet. The interview also has clips from performances of Minutae and Antic Meet and older black and white stills of Cage/Cunningham performances. The Interviewer and three men discuss: Minutae--the effect of collaboration between artists--effect of collaboration repeated--Antic Meet--evolution of Cage's music--changing from use of instruments to use of electronics--the concept of "live electronic" music. Photos from the making of the movie, postcards, and one portrait stored at OHAM??

An unidentified man (some sort of art history expert?) sits in a room and answers questions from an unidentified male Interviewer. Duchamp's first involvement with Cage--Cage living at Peggy Guggenheim's--being thrown out of the Guggenheim's and first meeting Duchamp--Cage playing chess with Mrs. Duchamp--humor in Duchamp's work--humor (often accidental) in Cage's work--beginning of Cage-Cunningham collaboration at Cornish College--Cage and Cunningham's aesthetic of independence of music and dance--similarity of Cage and Cunningham's artistic approach of liberation from the self--Cunningham's background with Martha Graham and ballet--Cage's transcendentalist background--Cage's interest in Thoreau--33's--and its relation to Rauschenberg--the audience as artist. Parts t and u have been removed from the access transcript at the request of Johnston's family. Audio files of these sections should be restricted from use as well. Family and the Interviewer noted that Johnston was tired and perhaps an unreliable narrator in this section. (However, the full transcript has been kept and may be made available to an appropriate researcher). A hard copy of a version of the transcript that includes extensive annotations and opinions from transcriber Brek Renzleman is located in Johnston's composer file. This transcript is restricted and only available for in-person research. It is not to be reproduced and is not endorsed by OHAM. Contacts regarding this interview are re Jeff Gibbens (musical historian) and Michael Mitchell (Johnston's executor and personal representative). Contact information for both can be found in the OHAM directory.
